Nestled within the heart of the park, in an oak-woodland meadow setting, is a new building. This 3000 square-foot facility replaces the Solstice Canyon dormitory destroyed in the 2007 Corral Fire. The new location is the Diamond X Ranch once belonging to legendary cowboy Rex Allen.

This dormitory is designed to support a living, social and working environment for National Park Service seasonal staff and interns. As a 'net-zero' energy building, it produces as much energy as it uses over the course of a year. In fact, it is the first new-construction building to meet National Park Service 'net zero' standards.

— Kim Park, NPS 'Green Team' Chairperson

How did this building achieve 'net zero'? The east-west orientation of the building harnesses the most solar energy. Basic space and water heating needs are met through a 36kW photovoltaic roof-mounted solar array, a ground geexchange field and pump for heating and cooling air, a solar hot water heating system, and daylighting. Selecting the highest EnergyStar®-rated appliances available and using energy-efficient paint colors plus construction materials also helped.

Geoexchange is an increasing popular choice for new construction but is as old as the earth itself. Geoexchange technology involves tapping into the relatively constant temperature of the earth (inset photo is of geoexchange field). Daylighting is based on a centuries old design basic that has been "rediscovered" by 20th century architects. It involves placing windows or other openings and reflective surfaces so that natural light provides internal lighting. Energy savings is also achieved from passive solar heating or cooling. Using such practices, it was back to basics for getting to 'net zero.'

Hiking & Safety Tips

Millennium by Mae Harrison, Spirit of the Mountains Photo Contest 2009 Winner – 2nd Place Tie, Scenic Shots Category

Ticks are plentiful. Some of them carry diseases. Check your clothing and exposed skin after hiking.

Southern Pacific Rattlesnakes make the mountains their home. Stay away from them, and they won't bother you. In case of a rattlesnake bite, DO NOT make an incision or try to draw out venom. Splint the extremity and transport victim to an emergency room.

Wear sturdy footwear—hiking boots or sneakers with good tread.

Poison oak can be identified by its clusters of three shiny leaflets. The best way to avoid it is to stay on trails.

Never hike alone, use the buddy system. That leaves someone to go for help if you encounter trouble.

Help prevent wildfire. Do not smoke on trails or in brush areas. Do not build fires on the ground.

Carry plenty of water and drink it. One quart for short walks, more for longer hikes.

Note: Whether you are an equestrian, hiker, or mountain bicyclist, please help us protect our natural areas by staying on designated trails. Be considerate of other trail users and respect private land.
